John Jay College of Criminal Justice

By action of the Board of Higher Education in December, 1954, a program of cooperation with the Police Department of the City of New York for the more effective education of the police force was undertaken. The initial step in the joint educational program was the establishment of a curriculum in Police Science leading to the Associate in Applied Science degree which had been registered by the State Education Department. Course work in the A.A.S. program began in September, 1955. A Specialization in Police Science in the curriculum leading to the Bachelor of Business Administration degree was approved in 1957 and the first matriculated students were admitted to the program in September, 1957.

In June of 1964 the Board of Higher Education established The College of Police Science as a senior college in the City University of New York. It opened in September of 1965 and Michael J. Murphy was named Acting President. The college absorbed the undergraduate program in Police Science which had been offered at the Baruch School. In September of 1966 Leonard E. Reisman was named President of the College and in 1966 the College's name was changed to more accurately reflect its concern with the whole field of criminal justice.

The sudden death of President Reisman in November of 1967 was mourned by the College community; his devotion to the students and the College will long be remembered, and in his short time as President he left a distinct mark in its history. In June of 1968 the Board of Higher Education named Donald H. Riddle President of the College.

The educational program of the College has as its objectives the broad education of law enforcement officers, professional training for police and other services in the process of criminal justice, improvement of the process of criminal justice, development of necessary goals of leadership, and the fostering of professional achievement in public service.

A graduate program in Public Administration began in September, 1967. Although the College's program is intended primarily for personnel of the various criminal justice agencies of New York City, it is also open, both in the graduate and undergraduate division, to non-City criminal justice agency personnel and to a limited number of civilian students.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

I wish to add my personal congratulations to each member of the graduating class of the John Jay College of Criminal Justice. I am well aware of the long years of sacrifice on the part of students and their families that is required for successful completion of academic work at this college. But every graduate can take satisfaction from the personal development of which the diploma is a symbol and of the contribution to the professionalization of law enforcement which will be a result.

I should like, also, to congratulate the editors of the Yearbook. It represents an important contribution to the building of a sense of community at this unique college. It is my hope that it will be one means of maintaining each graduate's continued association and identification with the College.

I extend to each of you again, my congratulations and my very best wishes for continued success in every endeavor.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The editors and staff of Justitia would like to thank the administration, faculty and staff of John Jay College for their assistance in the publication of this book. A special note of thanks should go to Mr. Austin Fowler for his efforts. And, on behalf of the graduates, we pay tribute to those of our families who endured and made this day possible.
